Speaker Bio: Beth Goodrich, OTR, ATP, PhD, FAOTA is an independent contractor supporting the delivery of evidence based and effective special education and related services in K-12 schools. She provides data-driven reviews of related service delivery processes and procedures from which to base recommendations for effective staff utilization. She coaches related service teams to facilitate the development of effective individualized educational programs for students with disabilities. She serves as an independent consultant to provide unbiased reviews and recommendations for positive outcomes supporting children, parents, teachers and administrators. Beth has over 30 years of experience serving in schools as both a practitioner and administrator in large urban and in rural to fast growing suburban school districts. She has led related service providers (OT, PT, SLP, AT, MT, CRS) in providing evidence-based practices through research, publications, collaborative policies and procedures and professional development at local, regional, state and national levels. She offers experience in programming and practitioner development, functional school-based evaluation and data driven PLAAFP development, standards based collaborative goal development, evidence-based service delivery methods and models, IEP facilitation, and navigating the independent educational evaluation.
